One of our newest core faculty members Assistant Professor Leonardo Salmena is one of 19 new Canada Research Chairs at the University of Toronto, announced by the Honourable Ed Holder, Minister of State (Science and Technology) on his visit to the Mississauga campus on April 9th.

As a new Canada Research Chair, Dr. Salmena will continue his work on inositol signalling pathways in acute myeloid leukemia in order to gain a better understanding of the molecular basis of this form of cancer. His laboratory has recently published a study in the journal Leukemia that demonstrates over-expression of INPP4B (Inositol polyphosphate-4-phosphatase, type II) is associated with more aggressive forms of AML and renders cells more resistant to chemotherapy. Dr. Salmena and his collaborators at the Ontario Cancer Institute are presently working on the mechanism of INPP4B overexpression in leukemia.

Congratulations, Dr. Salmena - you are off to a great start!
